STRING THEORY

Blame the Bohemians. The popular youthful style of Boho has resulted in the renaissance of macramé and other string art, adding a hygge touch to a home. This fresh, modern take on the 1970's craze encompasses a range of product categories: —Andrea Lillo

Whether used to decorate a window or a wall, RH Teen's ombre macramé drapery panels (in a set of two) are available in ocean and gray colorways.

The traditional macramé wall hanging gets updated in Surya's Bellini, which includes beads and is made in India.

Functional seating with fringe benefits, the Lyric and Lilou stools from Arteriors use cotton rope for the pattern and have plantation teak branch legs.

Part of the Destinations by Stavros collection that is inspired by places and cultures worldwide, these new pillows are handmade in India using rayon, tussah and handspun silk and wood beads.

Arteriors' Saxon pendant recalls an open crochet pattern made by string coconut beads for a modern silhouette with a natural look.

1 Peter Goldberger, left, who is retiring from Noritake, takes in his last Tabletop Show with Kristi Forbes of Forty One Madison, Eric Rudin of Rudin Management and Lisa Krierim of Villeroy & Boch.

3 Iris Dankner, founder of Holiday House, poses with Paul Wojcik of Motahedeh.

4 Specially decorated wreaths made by tabletop vendors for this year's Holiday House were first displayed in the Forty One Madison lobby.

High Point Highlights

From royalty to the red carpet, High Point Market was full of events for attendees to network and socialize after full days of market.

1 More than 40 celebrities from television channels such as HGTV walked the red carpet outside Showplace prior to Surya's Fall Celebration party. They included stars Libby Langdon and Richard Fleming.

2 Charles Spencer, the 9th Earl Spencer, was on hand to discuss the newest items in Theodore Alexander's Athorp furniture collection, which is based on his family home.

3 The International Society of Furniture Designers presented its annual Pinnacle Awards during market. Winners included Catina Suarez Roscoe for Borkholder Furniture, right, with presenter Genevieve Gordier.
